

DAiSY Get Writing Micro-podcast: Week 11 – Cataloguing change

Hello, it's Jackie Wills. This week we're thinking about change. For a writing exercise I want you to write about something that happened out on the street. This can be based on something real and recent, something you remember, or you can make it up.

It could be people talking as they wait for someone, someone singing along with headphones in, a car driver beeping their horn impatiently.

Perhaps you spot an ambulance outside someone's house, see a child having a tantrum. It might be as small a thing as noticing someone drop a can. It might be as big a thing as a massive lorry trying to squeeze down a narrow road.

Describe yourself watching, how witnessing this small or big thing makes you feel, what it prompts you to think about. Describe the time of day or night. Who else is around? What's the weather like? What do you hear and smell?

And then, imagine saying something out loud to yourself or someone else. What do you say and what has changed?
